The Pavlodar Mennonite Settlement, located in north-east Kazakhstan (see https://gameo.org/index.php?title=Pavlodar Mennonite Settlement \(Pavlodar Province, Kazakhstan\))) was established in 1906 by Mennonites from various settlements in the Russian Empire. The settlement of Slavs, Germans, and Jews in Kazakhstan throughout the 19th century was an attempt by the Russian Empire to colonize the territory now known as Kazakhstan. The settlement of non-Kazakhs increased substantially in 1906 upon the completion of the Trans-Aral Railway from Orenburg to Tashkent. By 1925 the settlement had a population of 2,736. The following data is a list of Mennonites in the Pavlodar settlement who were arrested and executed during the Great Purge.

The Great Purge (also known as the Great Terror) of 1937–1938 was a brutal campaign of political repression in the Soviet Union led by Stalin. It marked the peak of his efforts to consolidate absolute power by eliminating perceived enemies within the Communist Party, military, and broader Soviet society. An estimated 700,000 to 1.2 million people were executed, with over a million more imprisoned or sent to Gulag labor camps. Fear and paranoia gripped the country, as ordinary citizens were encouraged to denounce each other.

Ethnic Germans in the Soviet Union, including Mennonites, faced severe repression as part of broader “national operations” that targeted minority groups suspected of disloyalty. Although many German-speaking communities had lived peacefully in the Russian Empire for generations, they were viewed with suspicion by Stalin's regime, especially as tensions with Nazi Germany grew.

In 1937, Stalin approved NKVD Order No. 00439, which specifically targeted ethnic Germans for alleged espionage and ties to Germany, despite a lack of evidence. Tens of thousands were arrested; many were executed or sent to labor camps in Siberia and Central Asia. This ethnic repression dismantled the social fabric of German-Soviet life and spread fear throughout their communities. The purge marked a turning point in the fate of Mennonites and other German-speaking people in the USSR, transforming them from an accepted cultural minority into a persecuted and displaced population. Their suffering exemplifies how Stalin's regime fused paranoia, nationalism, and political terror, destroying entire communities based on ethnic identity rather than individual actions. For Soviet Germans, the Great Purge was not only a period of mass arrests and executions but the beginning of a prolonged cycle of displacement, discrimination, and cultural erasure that lasted well beyond Stalin's death.

I translated it using Microsoft Word's translation tools and then edited the document to make sure that the spelling of names conformed to standard spellings and that geographical entities were identifiable. I also added GRanDMA numbers when individuals could be identified.
